How to make a good impression at a job interview

In general, employers don't hire an applicant just by looking at his resume, because his behavior and appearance have a great importance.

People tend to check one's appearance and look for professionalism. The key to success is in the little things as dressing appropriately, in business casual clothes, not wrinkled and all tidied up, not wearing too much makeup and have a neat hairstyle, nothing too exaggerated. Positive attitude and perseverance are definitely something to keep in mind for the next interview because you might be working in a group or under pressure or have a big amount of tasks, but you can easily finish them when you cool off and put your mind to it.

It is important to be aware of your application and the position you applied for, paying attention to the quality, not quantity, in pursuance to convince the interviewer of your experience. Likewise, you should be prepared to respond effectively to the interview questions that employers typically ask at job interviews. Since these questions are so common, hiring managers will expect you to be able to answer them smoothly and without hesitation. You don't need to memorize an answer, but do think about what you're going to say so you're not put on the spot during the job interview. Your responses will be stronger if you prepare in advance, know what to expect during the interview, and have a sense of what you want to play up during your interview.

Politeness influences a lot as you cannot use slang or malediction with a person whom you'll be insubordinate, furthermore, you shouldn't be late or arrogant and you should be aware of your body language. For example, folding arms create a sense that you want to set up a barrier in front of you, as you're disinterested or don't buy into the interviewer message, in the same manner slouching signals to others that you lack confidence and have poor self-esteem or just low energy levels.

To conclude, prepare yourself both physically and mentally for an interview and you will come out successful.
